

4.11.6. Local travel in origin country

Local travel refers to any means of transportation needed to get from the participants' home to the airport. This can involve airport shuttles or other ground transport, but also flights within the origin country.

APC is usually able to confirm flight tickets between international airports, but booking local flights can be a more difficult task to even with our trusted travel agents.

The fixed amount to cover for a participant's local travel is USD 100, a sum that is expected to cover for a return trip to the airport in any country. But as we recognise the different contexts of each participant, they may request reimbursement of the total local travel by presenting receipts as support documentation. This can also include local flights that APC is not able to book.
